The conference is arranged by The Swedish Network for Translation Studies (SNÖ) in cooperation with The Doctoral Programme in Languages and Translation Studies (Utuling) of the University of Turku.

The Swedish Network for Translation Studies (SNÖ) is a Swedish non-profit organization that aims to serve as a forum where Swedish early-career researchers can interact. Another goal of the organization is to work for an increased status and visibility for translation studies in Sweden. The organization is open to early career researchers who do research related to translation studies. SNÖ's activities have so far resulted in recurrent research colloquia, yearly SNÖ conferences and two published anthologies.

The 2023 SNÖ conference will be special and focus on Swedish–Finnish cooperation and co-writing. Therefore, to provide opportunities for international networking, the conference takes place in Finland, a country with a particularly strong tradition in translation studies. The conference is arranged at the University of Turku in cooperation with the university's doctoral programme Utuling, but early career researchers (doing research related to translation or interpreting) from all Finnish universities are invited to participate.

The conference program includes:

- Short research presentations on previous work and general research interests. Here all the attendees will give short (10 min) presentations about, for example, their PhD topic and other projects and research interest.
- Keynote speakers. Kaisa Koskinen (Tampere University) and Kristiina Taivalkoski-Shilov (University of Turku) will share their experiences regarding co-writing, international cooperation and joint research projects.
- Idea pitch session. Participants with ideas for joint projects or co-written articles will have the chance to pitch their ideas. Five minutes per pitch!

- Mingle session. During the mingle session the participants who pitched an idea will have the opportunity to mingle with the other conference attendees and discuss the articles or projects in greater detail.
